Basically if they agree – either that they like each other or they don't – but they both agree, then it will be a positive outcome. But if one is positive about the other but the other is not positive about the one, then they do not agree – the outcome is negative.

When multiplying a negative number by a negative number the answer will always be negative. A positive times a negative equals a negative. A negative times a positive equals a negative. A positive times a positive equals a positive.
